Market Overview

Ghana’s inflation rate for May stood at 18.4%, driven by a credit squeeze, cedi appreciation, and the government’s commitment to fiscal consolidation. In response, the Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) maintained the policy rate at 28%, adopting a pragmatic approach to steer inflation toward its medium-term target of 6% to 10%. Further easing of inflationary pressures is expected, supported by the 30% appreciation of the Ghana cedi against the dollar, the 15% reduction in transport fares, and declining fuel prices. Meanwhile, falling interest rates continue to bolster confidence in the bond market, as evidenced by increased trade activity in the general category bonds. This trend presents upside opportunities for investors with mark-to-market portfolios, benefiting from declining yields.
